The book begins with an overview of the religious landscape of Rome in the first century AD. At this time, Rome was a melting pot of religions, with people from all over the empire coming to live in the city. Christianity was just one of many religions that were practiced in Rome, and it is not clear how it first arrived in the city.

However, by the second century AD, Christianity had begun to take root in Rome. The book provides a detailed account of the growth of the early Church in Rome, and the challenges that it faced. These challenges included persecution from the Roman authorities, as well as opposition from other religions.

Despite these challenges, the early Church in Rome continued to grow. By the fourth century AD, Christianity had become the dominant religion in Rome, and the city had become the center of the Catholic Church.
