The book is divided into three parts. The first part provides an overview of the major wars that took place in Northeastern Europe during the period

1558-1721. These wars included the Livonian War (1558-1583), the Russo-Swedish War (1610-1617), the Thirty Years' War (1618-1648), and the Great Northern War (1700-1721). The second part of the book examines the impact of these wars on state formation in Northeastern Europe. The book argues that warfare was a major factor in the development of the modern state in the region and that the wars of the early modern period played a key role in shaping the political and territorial landscape of Northeastern Europe.

The third part of the book examines the impact of warfare on social change and economic development in Northeastern Europe. The book argues that warfare had a profound impact on the social and economic development of the region and that the wars of the early modern period played a key role in shaping the social and economic landscape of Northeastern Europe.
